Splenic vein obstruction in chronic idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura: a report of three cases. Splenic vein obstruction is a rare and usually asymptomatic disorder. It is generally seen in elderly patients and is usually a part of an extensive thrombotic process of an anatomic lesion involving the portal system. We present 3 patients with splenic vein obstruction. They were elderly women with a past medical history of chronic idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura (ITP). The clinical presentation was nonspecific and included abdominal pain and a palpable abdominal mass. The diagnosis was made by abdominal ultrasound and computed tomographic (CT) scan. The most widely known etiology of splenic vein obstruction is portal venous thrombosis, but the condition is generally seen in patients with large vessels, and rarely in patients with splenic vein stenosis. Thus, our observation suggests that splenic vein stenosis may also be an additional etiologic factor in splenic vein obstruction. To our knowledge, this is the first report of such a case.
